We have just learned, from Mr. D soiel Webster's letter of reply to an anvitation to a bard eiter convention at Tippecanos, written as late as the 17th of April last, that "the glerious fabric of our Constitution will stands."

It may be forgotten, that in 1832, this same Mr. Webspec destands, that if the sate message of Andrew Jeshaus was sustained by the pouple, "the Constitution will be at an end. It will have expired in its Bliefeth year."

So that the Constitution was to have expired in 1833. And in 1835, the same Mr. Webster declared that the people And essentined the veto message, and had placed the establishment of as United States Bank as utterly at rest, that he should not air it again.

ANOTHER Puiful ATTEMPT of QUIBBLING. For some time, the Federal Whig presses and erators denied Harrison's vote for selling white men-first by quibbling on the word debt, and then by seatering that it was for crime—one an evasion, the other an entree assertion, both, heretofore sufficiently answered; and we believe new altogether absoluted by the party, since late publications of the laws incompetes have driven them to the wall.

FEDERAL ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.

We have always entertained and expressed the sinion that Nicholas Biddle, the great head of the "Great Regulator," was one of the greatest humbuggers of the present age. How long is it since the Federal Whig party one and all praised and glorified the " Great Financier" Biddle, as the only man living who could save this Nation from ruin and destruction? He was their Prince of money Kings, the very pattern of perfection as be les falles, and " none so poor to do him rever-ence"—not only fallen from power, but forced to bear the taouts and abuse of those who formerly assed the dust before him. The New York Journal of Commerce, a Federal Whig paper, thus speaks of Mr. Biddle and his great Regulator:
